Forgiven, But Not Forgotten

Our oldest son sent me a text this week that read, "Dad, the story of you, the police officers and the water balloons is now the favorite story in my house."

I wrote back, "Forgiven, but not forgotten."

This is another challenge to trust.

When Abraham was an old man and his wife was too old for it to be physically possible for her to have children, God made a promise to Abraham that they would have a child. In spite of the physical impossibility, Abraham believed God. His belief is why the Bible refers to him as the father of the faithful.

There are many factors of human nature that make forgiveness seem like an impossible promise.

One of them is our memory.

How can I be forgiven if I still remember it? Forgiveness is God's promise to us through our faith in Jesus, not our ability to shut it out of our mind.

Likewise, our forgiveness of others is not in our ability to forget what they have done. It is in the choice we make about how we will treat them after we have granted them our forgiveness.

It is the same with God. His promise of remembering our sins no more is not a statement about His knowledge nor His ability to remember. It is a statement about His promise to no longer hold the matter against us. It is as if it had never happened when it is covered by the blood of Jesus.

In Christ we are forgiven, even if we can't forget.

Flowers for Today Tony Brimingham

Jana never has been much of a flower girl. I have never been much of a flower guy. I get her the obligatory rose for Valentine's day, and sometimes I surprise her for her birthday. Our relationship is definitely not hinged to flowers. I know you fellows have got to be jealous by now.

We would both agree that we enjoy looking at flowers. We enjoy the colors of different type of flowers. Recently, I bought Jana a potted plant of geraniums. Wait, maybe they were daisies. To tell you the truth, I have no idea what they were except they were yellow. But they were very nice to look at. Jana put them in the window and watered them everyday. The flowers gave us great joy for about a week, and then, as all flowers do, they began to wilt. They began to fall over. They began to lose their color. Now they sit on our window sill all dried up and brown.

I am reminded of James chapter 4 when the writer says,

"You do not even know what will happen tomorrow. What is your life? You are a mist that appears for a little while and then vanishes."

This verse is so true. I am not promised tomorrow. I only have TODAY.

So today I want to be the brightest flower in the pot. Today, I want to bring joy to someone's life. Today, I want to serve my purpose in life. Today, I want to be the light on a hill to those around me. Today, I want to be a Christian.

Process and Progress Scott Pruitt

So many people have asked me if I built the sandcastle from Big House, and I kindly tell them, "No, It was a team effort." I do find sandcastles therapeutic and much fun. They are definitely a process, very much like us. Foundation is key to a successful castle, and many times, it is where many participate briefly and quit quickly. What is always interesting to me is that during the foundation phase of the sandcastle masterpiece, very few people, if any, observe the efforts...they are wanting to see the final product immediately. No one wants to watch someone piling heaps of sand for an hour or two...so they leave.

The next phase is where creativity takes shape. This is when you hear comments such as, "What is that?" "Whacha doin'?" "You need some help? (I love that question and always answer with a resounding, YES.)" Most people still have no clue what is being created, but the sandcastle is starting to, at least, look cool and interesting. Walls, Towers, Bridges, Roads, and whatever else you want to dream about has a place. Sometimes, a short break is necessary to step away from the castle to gain perspective. This is why we schedule retreats and vacations.

The final phase is what I call the Sculpting Phase. Details, Details, Details. Stone, brick, steps, windows, shadow lines, doors, words, swimming pools. Call me a sandcastle nerd, but I actually have a sandcastle tool kit for all the intricate sculpting. The kit even came with a pneumatic sand remover for mortar lines (it's a straw).

This is the thing. Some of us are detail driven, some are gifted with ideas and conceptualization, most understand the importance and value of foundational principles. All are key to sandcastles and life. I'm always asked after building a sandcastle, "Are you finished?" I kindly tell them, "No, the next phase is tomorrow." They typically reply, "Well, what if the waves knock it down?" I smile and answer, "Then, we start over again if we are given another day." We are a work in progress with increasing talents and gifts. Use them, develop them, grow them and invite others to join you in the process. Love Deeply. Live Simply. Every now and then, build a sandcastle and think of the incredible plans God has for you. Allow Him to sculpt you into a masterpiece.

Give Me One Good Reason

A long time ago when my daughter was very young she got into trouble for opening presents she wasn't supposed to. When we found out what she did we talked to her about it and explained why it is important to wait. Being little she heard what we said but did it again. So now I had to put on my big daddy shoes and talked to her and told her, "Give me one good reason why I shouldn't punish you." Her response left me a little perplexed; because I didn't know what to say. She said, "Because you love me."

That situation makes me think of my relationship with God. Should he punish me even though he loves me? Will his love for me prevent all the bad things from happening? Can I avoid all forms of pain and suffering because he loves me?

Hebrews 12:6 (NASB) For those whom the Lord loves He disciplines, and He scourges every son whom He receives."
